

A special advertising section

Considered an architect's architect, was recently awarded the commission of the century—the rebuilding of the World Trade Center site. Designer of some of the world's most provocative buildings, has virtually reinvented architecture, transforming sand and stone into spiritual structures that resonate profoundly with the heart. The first architect to be given the Hiroshima Art Prize for work that promotes peace, is relentless in his vision to create spaces that are positive responses to the brutalities that surround us all.

Daniel Libeskind

Never Follow

The Suspension of Disbelief: Advertising and Architectural Ethics

an exhibition curated by
James Fischer, AIA, RIBA

Vassar College Art Library
October 9 through November 30, 2007